LOCKSLEY HALL, ROOM 28

Dear Mr. Gering,

My apologies in advance for disturbing you, as I know you are on sabbatical to look after your ailing mother. I hope this letter finds you and your mother improving in good health.

I would like to take this opportunity to introduce to you some colleagues of a dear friend of mine. They are interested in the events leading up to and during the Roades expedition. Professor Roades and his wife are currently taking convalescent leave, but have not been heard from in several months, and we are growing quite concerned.

The group you see before you have kindly volunteered to visit Blackwater Creek to ensure the health and safety of Henry and Abigail Roades, and if necessary, provide safe escort in returning them to Arkham. I have dispatched them to your residence in the hopes that you might be able to provide some insight into the Roades expedition, Blackwater Creek, and its environs and residents so that they may better prepare for their journey. I implore you to provide all possible assistance and be as forthcoming with them as you would with myself or Professor Roades.

Regards,
Professor Ernest Motarish
