

I can't sleep with Horke's calling.
WHY WON'T SHE STOP??

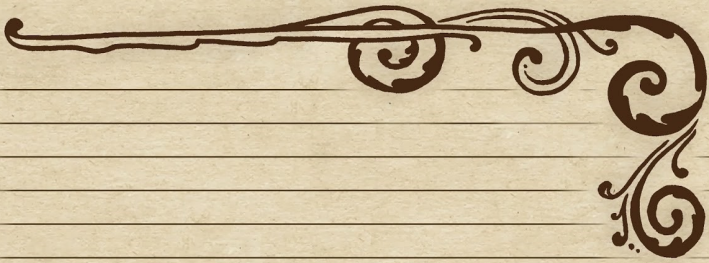

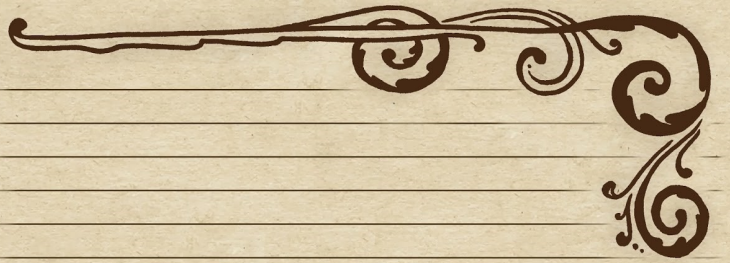

June 26th

Horke is still trapped in the holy site. I have yet to find anyone worthy to face her. She is divine and we profane her with our presence.
Daily, the creek is flowing better now. I can hear Horke at all times, calling. . . no, singing to me. It is a comfort.
It is a loanor.

The birth of this nation is pale in comparison to you, Mother. You are beautiful and powerful. I must save you. You must save me. The Lakotas must be held back. My god, what can I do? Mother, what can I do??!

Hooper's voice is clear.
It is everywhere. There is still time to free her.

June 24th

Such an odd name for a creek, it should be called The Water of life, not a filthy name like Blackwater. Yes, Hooper, I hear you. I love you.
Please, please, let me sleep tonight.

The water of life flows, Mother calls... do I free her and stop the flow? I miss her so, but I can hear her every day. If I free her, what will happen? If I don't free her, what will happen? I must but I mustn't.

I was a fool to ever talk ill of Mother. Her voice, her song invigorates me. I have not felt so young and strong since the war.
I must free her, mustn't I!

The Carmody brothers are worse than the "Sheriff", always watching me. Mother, I hear your call, I hear you sing, but do you hear me! Give me your guidance.

There is a cave in the hills. The old Blackwater Creek appears to spring from it. Sheer cliff... I believe it will be significant to the dig Spoke with "Sheriff" Sprouston today, shifty man. Must keep an eye on him. He shares my suspicions that the cave at the mouth of Blackwater Creek is or was a holy site.

His belief may run even deeper than that.
